Jeff Koller, General Counsel and Business Development Administrator for Hutchings commented that "[T]he reality in litigation is that a substantial portion of the evidence in a case passes through the hands of the court reporter. TrialPoint and Hutchings agree that it is a cost-effective and powerful tool to initiate the transitional aspect from discovery to trial early on so that the court reporter's final product can easily merge into current and envisioned trial presentation methods. It's very encouraging to be associated with a company such as TrialPoint who shares our goal to proactively anticipate the needs of our clients long before an opening statement is ever made."

This association is not a directive, but one that creates a proactive option to consider for your future litigation requirements. Current clients will be able to contact their account representatives directly as before; however, new clients will be able to initiate a relationship through either company.
